

The New Sales Training From Sales to Marketing Lisbeth Calandrino

Is Your Sales Team Ready??

The internet has made today's consumer more knowledgeable than ever. Years ago the consumer depended on the salesperson for all of their information; where else could they go? With social media and other online tools, this leaves the salesperson in a quandary. Where do we fit?

The issues are no different; how do I to network with customers and get them to buy from me? The game is the same but the path has changed. The salesperson has more tools to influence the consumer to buy. The real key is to continue to grow these relationships to continue to build important connections and more sales.

Google says, and who knows more about us than Google, that we should be connecting online and getting to know people before they need us. Once they buy from us, we can stay in touch so they will remember to send us their friends. The new savvy salesperson is a cross between a salesperson and a 'mini-marketer.'

Join us as we discuss what tools are available and how salespeople can use them to make more sales and make an impact on the bottom line.
